The Literary Section of the Fortnightly Club will meet March 22 with Mrs. Keenan on Washington St. The topic of the meeting is Lowell's poem Columbus. The program consists of a reading of the poem Freedom by Mr. H. E. Thompson, Essay on the poem Columbus, by Rev. D. L. Fisher; selections and criticisms of this poem by Mrs. Ferris, followed by a discussion led by Mrs. L. K. Russell. This poem is so short that it is thought best not to announce any special topics of discussion, but it is suggested that we all might find much pleasure and profit in a careful study of the entire poem and a consideration of the genius and ability of Lowell to picture the soul experiences of the great pioneers in the world's development.

LITTLE CAFE WAS A GOOD SHOW.

And Large Audience Appreciated Its Good Features.

The Little Cafe which played at the local open house Monday evening was one of, if not the best attractions of its kind ever showing in this village. It is unfortunate that the stage here did not permit the company to use all of its scenery. It was not large enough, either, to allow an appearance of all the members of the chorus. 47 persons were on the stage. The company carried sixty.

The packed house which greeted the Little Cafe would seem to be evidence that this town is willing to support that sort of production. It was a good show, well staged, and showed that it had somebody directing it.

MISS CRANE AT WATERTOWN

SPEAKS AT JEFFERSON COUNTY MUSIC TEACHERS' MEETING.

Topic "What School Music Can Do For The Music In Any Community."

Miss Julia E. Crane, of the Crane Normal Institute of Music of this village, was the speaker at a meeting of the Jefferson County Music Teachers' Association in Watertown Tuesday evening of last week. About 250 were present; Miss Crane's topic was "What Can Public School Music Do For Any Community?" She said, in part:

"Tastes are formed in early childhood. If a man in his early days is taught to seek companionship with good books, poems and music, when he is free to choose for himself, he will never seek the saloon or the low dance hall."

"It goes without saying that one important aim of music in the schools is the cultivation of the taste of the children for that which is best in music. When this is accomplished, what has been done for the church? Music, which is one of the most highly valued aids in the carrying-on of its work, is greatly improved. It is improved not only in that the choirs are being supplied with better musicians, but the congregations made more sensitive to the appeal of music, and are enabled to join more fully in the services."

"How many happy homes music has made. I suppose we have no way of knowing, and of all of the people in the community to be directly benefited by school music, there are probably more whose benefits are greater or of a nature to be more definitely rated than the musician of the town. The piano teachers find much of the drudgery of their task eliminated because the children already read the printed page of music. When students who have sung in school every day from the kindergarten through the High School come for individual voice lessons, I have found them not only more interesting pupils, because they love good music and can read it at sight, but because they have breath control, a freedom in the use of the voice and a tone quality superior to that of pupils who begin voice lessons without such training as the schools give. From my own experience, and observation I can truly say that no music teacher in the community receives more help from school music than the voice teacher."

"There are many causes for poor results in school work of any nature. The first one that comes to the mind of those uninitiated in school affairs, is inefficiency of teachers and there are many other causes. One of the other causes is a lack of the right kind of material to work with. Then a lack of co-operation between teachers, principals, supervisor and superintendents may completely blockade progress."

"In our schools are to be found the musicians of the future and with a proper co-operation between teacher, superintendent and the parents enough material could be furnished to supply all the musicians needed in the musical and municipal life."

"Since it has such a place in community life there is every reason why the musical talent of each community should be developed, and equally good reason why the listening public should receive the training necessary to make them appreciative of good music. We are just beginning to learn what good music can do for the people, because the invention of the mechanical instruments has brought great music, the artist interpreter and the public together as has never been possible before."

"These instruments should be a part of every school. In the schools where these have been tried there were indications that music would have a more prominent place in the curriculum of the school."
