CONDITIONS NORMAL AGAIN.

(Continued from Page 1.) Highway Commissioner Schellenger and his men worked all last week with teams and plows, and by Saturday had fair going. A hard wind, however, will raise havoc again.

Both in the village and in the country, the drifted snow was packed almost as hard as ice, and would readily bear a man's weight. Plows were of use only between drifting when it was necessary to halt and resort to shoveling to dig a way through.

STORM CLOSES MILLS.

Price of Newsprint Soars When Supply is Curtailed.

Great loss in production of various grades of paper in this section of the state has been sustained by the recent snow blockade, combined with the existing shortage of box cars. Several plants were forced to close down entirely for several days, while others were partially compelled to suspend production. Its effect upon the price of paper is believed to be toward a still higher price, for the heavy supply and demand has been responsible for the prices on newsprint reaching as high as 12 1/2 cents a pound, although the general figures range from 8 to 10 cents.

Many mills are equipped with storage for but a few days and the lack of cars from one reason or another caused a blockade in production. The Remington Paper and Power Co. was about the worst affected in this section. The Norwood & St. Lawrence Railroad, which serves their mill at Norwood, Norfolk and Raymondville, was blocked and it was Thursday noon before it was tunneled out. The Norwood mill was down for two days, one machine at the Raymondville plant was down for a day and a half, and the Norfolk plant was similarly affected.

MALONE TUNNELS WALKS.

Malone appears to hold the record for high drifts in the storm of last week. In one street in that village drifts were piled up by the wind so high that the villagers just tunneled through them, not stopping to dig down from the top. One man's door was held fast by the snow outside and he was forced to seek refuge through a window.
