Navy Explains New Mailing Regulations

Thousands of newspapers and magazines submitted by friends and relatives for mailing to Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard personnel overseas have been refused since July 1 under a new Navy Department ruling which became effective that day, headquarters of the Third Naval District reported this week.

Apparently because of unfamiliarity with the new regulation, the Navy announcement said, senders continue to try to dispatch second class material without the written request from the addressee now required.

The new regulation, introduced because of the tremendous increase in mail going to the Pacific, was announced June 21. At the same time the Navy announced a plan by which current magazines are now being stocked by ship service stores ashore and afloat, giving sailors, Marines and Coast Guardsmen better service than before for full-size magazines which do not have overseas editions.

Post Office officials have advised the Navy that many persons desiring to send second class packages were unaware of the new regulations or in some cases thought they applied only to publications sent by the publishers or news dealers.

The Navy announcement emphasized that the regulations apply to all newspapers and magazines submitted for mailing to men of the three services.

Persons wishing to send newspapers or magazines second class must show a written request from the addressee for the material.

Senders are reminded in the event they wish to send such matter first class that they are limited to eight ounces.

10,500,000 Wires Were Sent By GI's And Home Folks

Over 10,500,000 expeditionary force messages have been handled by Western Union since June 1942 between servicemen overseas and relatives at home, it was announced by Miss Evelyn Bishop, local telegraph manager. Of these only 2,900,000 EFM'S were from the folks at home. Service people sent 2.6 to each one they received.

More than 400,000 EFM's were sent to members of the armed forces in the first seven months the service was in effect in 1942, nearly 900,000 in 1943, and over a million in 1944. Around 100,000 a month are sent now. Messages from the servicemen to home jumped from 600,000 in 1942, to 3,200,000 in 1944 and are running about 300,000 a month now.

The EFM service provides 237 phrases from which a combination of any three is sent or by a serviceman at a cost of only 60 cents. The phrases range from such terse expressions of affection as "Kisses" or "Love" to the more loquacious text No. 61, "You are more than ever in my thoughts at this time."

Frequently selected EFM phrases sent by servicemen and also by their families are "Are you all right? Worried about you" and "Please don't worry." Other well-worn phrases are both reassuring and affectionate: "Writing," "All well at home." The popular "Darling," "All my love"; and ever-welcome "Letters sent" or "Telegram received. Many thanks" or just plain "Well." Still others convey the news, "Son born," or "Daughter born."
