The answers to everyday insurance problems*

By JIM LAHEY

QUESTION: A short time ago, my husband decided to build an extra store room in the asement He went to the garage to get his box of tools which he hadn't used for several weeks. The tool box was gone and we have no idea who took it or even just when it disappeared. We had no burglary insurance but I wondered if any insurance company would have paid the loss anyway since we were unable to state exactly when the tools were taken.

ANSWER: Most Residential Theft policies include a Mysterious Disappearance clause which would cover the loss you describe. Under this clause, insured articles which disappear unaccountably are presumed stolen and the insurance company settles the loss.
