THE TWO AND A QUARTER PERCENT RATE TO DEPOSITORS

The report to corporators a year ago summarized the policy of this institution with regard to interest, in these words: "The Burlington Savings Bank has always maintained that a generous and stable rate of interest to depositors is most likely to encourage the practice of thrift. It believes the saver should normally be able to count on the amount of return which his savings will bring. Accordingly, this Bank has aimed to pay year in and year out the highest rate of interest to depositors for the longest period. Thus, throughout the war years and the depression years which preceded the war, it has never allowed interest paid depositors to drop below an unconditional two percent per annum, even when it stood almost alone in paying that rate." The decision of the Bank's Trustees last June to raise the rate of interest to two and a quarter percent per annum resulted from the conviction that the Bank's earnings made a two and a quarter percent rate just and appropriate and gave sufficient assurance of its being continued.
