Artificial bubbles are for seltzer — not for beer.

The idea of shooting CO₂ into beer has never appealed to me somehow. Oh, the process is widely used and accepted in the industry today, and I'm sure there's nothing wrong with it. It saves time and space and refrigeration, and hence money, by making it possible for a brewer to cut the aging time down to two or three weeks and still turn out a beer with "life."

But it just doesn't appeal to me. I always felt that beer should have a natural life of its own, and that's the only thing you'll ever find in a bottle of Utica Club beer. I think it makes a difference in the beer. I think it's the only way you can turn out a beer that has mellowness and maturity — by aging it properly.

And judging by the amount of Utica Club we're selling, there are still plenty of stubborn characters around who agree with me.
