Experts Puzzled By Child Abuse

They keep coming into hospitals, welfare departments, public and private social agencies, in a steady trickle that sometimes becomes a stream. Children with deep bruises on burns, children with broken limbs or internal injuries, children grossly malnourished or suffering from neglected diseases.

It's a medical problem, a special problem, a mental health problem rolled into one; the "battered child syndrome." Floundering by doctors and social workers a few years ago, it has by now been thoroughly mulled over by experts and interested bystanders. But

What to do? It's one of society's toughest problems. According to Dr. Frederic Wertham, noted psychiatrist, the chief culprit is society itself. "People aren't sufficiently concerned," he said. "Some of these cases are horrible beyond belief. The real gravity of the problem has yet to be understood."

He rejected a widespread view that it's merely a question of emotional disorder on the parents' part, subject to cure by judicious counseling. "It goes much deeper than that. Many of these abusive parents are 'normal' persons by most modern standards. The young parent of today has grown up in an atmosphere pervaded by violence. Not only in the books, news reports, entertainments they absorb, but in the dealings of individuals and nations with one another."

He had no ready solution to offer. Would a simmering down of general violence help? There is no scientific certainty of it, the psychiatrist believes; but he indicated that in an atmosphere where violence tends to be regarded as a solution to problems, any change in public attitude could only be for the better. — St. Lawrence County Tuberculosis & Public Health Association, Inc.

STRENGTH THROUGH FAITH
He loveth righteousness and justice. — (Psalms 33:15)

Under God's law of love and justice we are secure in our good. When someone has taken something from us, stand fast in faith. Do not condemn but hold to the idea that our good comes to us from God. Under God's law of love and justice, we cannot be separated from our good.
