

Determined Coed Initiates Program

Cindy Gilder, a Clarkson senior who is majoring in civil and environmental engineering, is a determined young woman. Last year she decided that she wanted to spend part of her junior year studying abroad. Since Clarkson didn't have such a program, Cindy applied to Colleges in England on her own. When she was accepted at The City University in London, England, she took a semester's leave of absence from Clarkson and traveled to England for "one of the most valuable experiences of my life."

Cindy was able to follow her basic engineering curriculum, but in addition she took a history course that enabled her to learn the history of London from the British point of view. She also developed several new interests and made friendships that she is sure will last for a lifetime.

When she returned to the United States this fall, Cindy decided to promote an official Clarkson exchange program with City University. The London university was a logical choice because it is similar to Clarkson in that the majority of students study engineering, management and science. (Coincidentally, both colleges were founded in 1896.)

She enlisted the aid of John Chapple, Clarkson's vice-provost, to act as administrative liaison with City University and with the help of several other faculty members and administrators, the various details of the exchange program were worked out over the next few months.

Three Clarkson students are studying in London this semester: Jeffrey Allen, Sidney, Ohio, a junior majoring in electrical and computer engineering; Mark Rieman, East Aurora, N.Y., a junior who carries a double major in accounting and economics; and Amos Rogers, Clarks Summit, Pa., an industrial distribution major.

They all have above-average academic records and were recommended by their departments. Mark Rieman has written to Cindy from London to say that "all her work is paying off" for him.

Chapple is confident the Semester Abroad Program will continue at Clarkson. Already several present

Coed Reports Attack

A 19-year-old Potsdam State coed told police that she was assaulted about 1 a.m. Friday as she walked along near the intersection of Bay Street and Pierrepont Ave.

According to the village police reports, she said that a tall male jumped at her from behind a tree, grabbed her, and tried to tear her blouse off. She struggled with him and was knocked to the ground but not hurt, according to the report.

Then she reported that she ran toward the SUCP campus. Police are investigating the incident.

sophomore students have an interest in studying in England next year. "Clarkson is pleased to have added this dimension to the educational opportunities offered to our students," says Chapple. "And we are hoping it may lead to some English exchange students enrolling at Clarkson."

Cindy Gilder is now interviewing with various companies, seeking a job for next year as an environmental engineer. The odds at Clarkson favor her getting the position she wants. She is a very determined young woman.
